Ignoring The Signs

To find out that your spouse or lover has been cheating on you is a devastating experience. But to know that your partner has been doing it for a considerable period of time without your knowledge is even harder to accept.

A lot of times, people make the mistake of ignoring the signs of cheating which usually will surface a short while after the cheating has begun. They ignore them because they cannot relate the signs to the act of cheating due to the trust that naturally exists between two people in a relationship. Even if they can see the signs, they try very hard not to think about them because they simply cannot imagine or accept that their partner will cheat.

So, if people ignore the signs of cheating, how do they find out? Usually, by accident. They stumble onto a clear evidence of cheating that cannot be explained away, such as condoms in their partner's bag when they are not used in their sex life, photos of their partner and lover, love letters and emails. Proof that can no longer make them turn a blind eye and pretend nothing is going on.

Do You Want To Wait Until You Too Stumble Onto A Piece of Evidence?

If you can see some of the signs of cheating in your relationship and is now reading this, you are at least a step ahead of many others who simply miss or ignore all the clues in front of their very own eyes.

If you already suspect cheating is going on, it's pretty silly to wait until concrete evidence stares right back at you before you take some sort of action. Let me tell you why.

Firstly, if you wait until the evidence reveals itself, it could already be too late to save your relationship. Secondly, every single day that you remain ignorant, you may be wasting your time being with someone that may not be worthy of your love and respect.

And thirdly, the longer you wait, the sillier you would feel when everything finally comes tumbling out. You certainly don't want to look back with regret of why you didn't move faster to look for a way out when the problem first cropped up.

When You Don't Want To Feel Stupid...

Therefore, it is to your advantage to find out the truth sooner rather than later. The feeling of having been cheated on is already bad enough. But when you have discovered the truth that your partner is indeed a cheater, you will begin to be able to make sense of those signs that first appeared. If those signs appeared months and months ago, it can make you feel stupid for not digging further then.

It's a blunt message, yes, but that's the reality. Nobody likes to be treated like a fool and yet, it's not uncommon to be the last person to know that your own spouse is having an affair. Your partner's friends, co-workers, relatives and even your own friends may be aware of what is going on behind your back. But the one person who should be the first to know, for some reason doesn't and that person is YOU!

If you don't want to be in the above situation, feeling stupid and regretful for not having done something sooner, then you should be proactive and take the initiative to find out the signs of cheating and the truth.

The Extent Of The Cheating

Commonly, when you are on a quest to gather evidence of the cheating, many more things will come to the fore to let you see a more complete picture. For people who simply stumble upon an incriminating piece of evidence and confront their partner, questions like these can keep swirling in their mind:

- How long have the cheating been going on?
- Who is this other person in my spouse's life?
- How often have they been meeting up?
- When and where do they see each other?

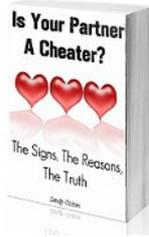

Wanting to know some details about the cheating is normal. But your partner may not be willing to share these with you and in a lot of cases, such questions are simply brushed aside with a request to you to forgive and forget.

So, this is where gathering evidence can help answer some of these questions you may never get from your own partner. Little bits and pieces of evidence here and there can be pieced together to form clearer picture of the extent of the cheating. It can also help you make a more informed decision of whether to pack your bags and leave once you have seen enough of the extent of the lies and deception.

Finding out the truth may be painful but it is often better to know than to remain ignorant or pretend that the problem doesn't exist. That is, unless you want to lead everyday of your life with your head buried in the sand. You certainly don't want that kind of life, do you?

I bet you don't. So, it's time to learn more and find out the truth once and for all!
